MorQi

Balance is your superpower.

A five-element action game where kids learn to name their feelings by freeing a frozen world. Built for kids 7 to 11. Fun for the whole family.

MorQi builds emotional vocabulary through play. Kids 7 to 11 learn to name what they feel, the way they learn a creature's weakness: by playing, never by a lesson. It is a game, not a treatment. Grown-ups learn alongside them, so the whole family can play together.

FREED

"I worried about everyone so much that I forgot to live."

The Stone Matron is a grandmother stuck in worry. Beat her and she changes back, and says what the worry cost her.

Run in. Free them. Bring the world back.

An action game in the genre where your powers fire on their own and you move through whole crowds of creatures. Every creature you free turns the frozen ground back into life around you, so progress is something you can see.

Drag to move

One thumb. Powers and your spirit animal fight beside you.

Use the right element

Each creature is weak to one element, the one that keeps it in check. Match it and it frees twice as fast.

Hold the temple, wake the world

In the Grove, the Ridge and the Silver City, free creatures inside a frozen temple's ring and it lights up and fights for you. Giants crash in. Each needs its own trick. Everywhere, ice becomes beach and sea, bamboo, lanterns, harvest, a silver city.

Playable today on the web: 5 levels (four short realms and a finale of 10 minutes or more), 7 Keepers, 12 spirit animals, 15 creatures, 3 kinds of giant, 5 Star Calls, an original score.

Kids learn the five elements of traditional Chinese medicine the way they learn type matchups in any monster game: by playing. Water puts out fire, wood drinks up water, metal chops wood. Using a creature's weakness frees it twice as fast and earns a star.

Omni

THE WIN CONDITION 05

You can't win by grinding.
You win by balance.

Each realm holds Qi Stones. Free enough creatures, or wake its temples, and its stones are yours. Hold them all and your Keeper goes Omni: they become the all-five form, riding a storm of cloud and rainbow lightning, untouchable for fifteen seconds while the five elements break in their generating order, with its own anthem. Only then does the boss appear. In the finale, every stone takes Omni one tier higher, and full Omni finishes the boss.

The reward is the lesson. Balance is literally the superpower.

Seven Keepers, so every kid finds themselves.

Every villain is a person stuck in one feeling.

Traditional Chinese medicine pairs each element with a feeling. Each realm's boss is a person frozen in that feeling. Beat the boss and they change back. Each one hands the Keeper a Star Call from their own story. Kids see that people can change, and so can they.

Five realms is chapter one. The world is still frozen.

The Stillmaker froze far more than five lands. A chapter is five realms; a season adds one realm, so the story runs for years. The demo ends as he arrives.

1 A new land every season

Once the seed round lands, about every ten weeks: a new realm, new creatures, a new person to free and the Star Call they give. The first realm of every chapter is free to try.

2 Luma's nine tails

Luma grows one tail each season, and each brings back a memory of the hearth and the child who lived there. Nine tails lead to why the Stillmaker froze the world.

3 Deeper feelings as players grow

The first five lands hold fear, anger, restlessness, worry and grief. Later lands, some where two elements meet, bring loneliness, jealousy, pride and shame.

4 Mastery with no ceiling

Omni, Surge and fusions today; next, spirit animals that grow for months and a Sanctuary that grows with everyone you free; later, every Keeper's own art for each Surge form.

5 A reason to return every day, every year

Later: family co-op where the hardest bosses need a team in balance, a daily Rift, and yearly festivals like Lunar New Year and Mid-Autumn.

LUMA'S TAILS  NOW → SEASON 8

Planned, except what is marked today. The five realms, Omni, Surge, fusions and the Freed Book are playable on the web now. A $100K raise funds the first season; a season about every ten weeks comes with the seed round.

Two players. One said: "I can't just leave right now."

Abby got better fast

Between two sessions an hour apart, on an updated build, her Level 2 went from 3 falls and 1 ultimate to 0 falls and 3 ultimates. Sixteen minutes heads-down in session two.

Demaris: "Still challenging, but I can get out in the ways that I should."

An experienced player, and a co-founder, so we count his word as feedback, not proof.

Abby had never played this kind of game. Two players are a story, not data. This round buys the data.

Lingokids, 2025 [5]

The soft launch measures what it costs to reach a family, with $6,000 of test marketing; at $100K it also measures how many subscribe.

In play today: whole crowds of creatures, freed one realm at a time.

Easy to love. Hard to copy.

A playable game for about $20K

Six months, two founders, a mechanics consultant and an AI-assisted pipeline built five playable levels.

ELEMENTS

Real roots, and the lesson is the game

The five elements are rooted in the practice of a co-founder who is a Qigong master and studied Traditional Chinese Medicine. Kids learn them by playing, never by a quiz.

PLANNED

After the seed round, a new season about every ten weeks, Luma's nine tails as the story's spine, and new realms that explore one element or join two.

Anyone can copy the genre. A copy would still need the trust-first design, the roots, the world, and a team that builds this much for this little.

Free to try. One family plan. Safe by design.

Every story chapter is free to try: its first realm is free. One family plan, about $5.99 a month, unlocks every realm, season and look. No power is ever sold on its own: every power is earned by playing. Only a grown-up can buy the plan.

The first realm of every story chapter	Free

a year per subscribing family ($5.99 a month). If 3–5% of monthly playing families subscribe (one plan per family), 100,000 families gross about $216K–$359K a year, and 1,000,000 families about $2.2M–$3.6M.

Our model: illustrative, not a forecast. Gross, before app-store fees.

One purchase, made by a grown-up

The family plan sits behind a parent gate. Nothing is sold to kids.

No ads, no open chat, no typed names

Built for COPPA, the US children's privacy law, from day one.

Why it matters

Epic Games paid $520M in 2022: a $275M COPPA penalty and $245M refunds for purchase tricks [6]. Stricter COPPA rules began in April 2026 [7].

What a season brings

About every ten weeks once the seed round lands. Nothing in a season expires. Illustrative.

A new realm
A land to thaw

A person to free
Stuck in one feeling

A Star Call
Their gift to you

A Keeper look
A new style

A hero outfit
The season's finale

From five playable levels to a game families come back to.

DONE

The game, playable

Design, five web levels, original score, two playtests.

MONTHS 1–2

Native iPhone

Level 1 rebuilt as a native game: the run, powers, spirit animal.

MONTHS 3–4

The loop around the run

A home base and spirit animal growth. At $100K, also the first season and the family plan.

MONTHS 5–6 (TO 9 AT $100K)

Families, then soft launch

About 100 families on TestFlight from month 5, so day-30 numbers land by month 6; then one or two markets. Targets: day 1 at 35–50%, day 7 at 15–25%, day 30 at 5–15%.

THEN

The seed round

$1.75M–$4M on real retention data: the full team, five seasons a year, Android.

Later, play together. Each family member brings an element, and the hardest bosses fall only to a team in balance. The game's lesson becomes its multiplayer.

Two founders, one playable game.

It started with Qigong. Filming Demaris's masterclasses, Amos also saw him as a father, and was struck by his kids: calm, sharp and able to name what they felt. Two lifelong gamers asked if a game could carry some of that practice to every child.

Amos A.

Co-founder and Creative Director, DP Media.
Lead concept, story and contact.

Demaris Parker

Co-founder and Wellness Director, DP Media.
Qigong master and bodywork practitioner who studied Traditional Chinese Medicine. Shaped the concept, rooted in the Qigong at its heart.

Sammy P.

Consultant on game mechanics, strategy and tactics.

Recruiting next: a licensed child psychologist and a cultural advisor. Neither is on board yet.

In six months and for about $20K, DP Media's two founders and a mechanics consultant built all of this with an AI-assisted pipeline: five levels, seven Keepers, twelve spirit animals, fifteen creatures, three giants and an original score. The founders take no salary, so every dollar goes into the game.

$60K to put MorQi in families' hands.

$60K

Target. About six months to a soft launch.

$100K

The most we'd take. Nine months and a bigger test.

What it proves: day-1, day-7 and day-30 retention from real families; the calm check (how parents say their child feels after playing, and whether the child can name the feeling each boss is stuck in); and, at $100K, whether parents subscribe. For scale, Nurture raised a $2.8M pre-seed in 2024 for empathy play [8].
